Andrew Spencer Named Burns & McDonnell Regional Director of Transmission & Distribution for Eastern Canada

TORONTO, Ontario — Burns & McDonnell, a 100% employee-owned engineering and construction firm, announced Andrew Spencer as regional director of transmission and distribution for Eastern Canada. Based in Toronto, Andrew will lead the region's activities in energy infrastructure with a focus on the transmission and distribution markets.

"Andrew's experience and leadership will be a tremendous asset to our team," says Darcy Wagner, the firm's managing director for Canada. "He'll help us deliver impactful infrastructure solutions, strengthening our long-standing commitment to communities across Canada."

With over 80 years of experience in Canada, and office locations in both Toronto and Calgary, Burns & McDonnell has been a proud partner in building the industrial and utility infrastructure in the country. The Toronto office serves clients in sectors including power generation, electrical transmission and distribution, energy storage, oil and gas, and manufacturing.

"Our Toronto office plays a vital role in our Canadian operations," says Mike Brown, vice president for international operations at Burns & McDonnell. "With Andrew's leadership, we're excited to build on our success and drive innovative solutions that meet the evolving needs of communities nationwide."

"Having spent over 20 years on the utility side, I've seen firsthand the difference that strong partnerships and innovative thinking can make," Spencer says. "I'm excited to join Burns & McDonnell with the opportunity to join a committed team of professionals working together to deliver solutions that make a lasting impact on the clients and communities we serve."
