EPC Construction Across Infrastructure, EnergyGreg Fischer, Paul Westerberg Bring Decades of Experience to Team*

KANSAS CITY, Missouri — Burns & McDonnell has announced the addition of two senior construction leaders, reinforcing the firm's continued investment in its construction capabilities amid global market growth.

Greg Fischer joins the firm to lead construction for infrastructure markets including environmental, transportation and water. Paul Westerberg will oversee EPC operations across energy markets, including expansion in liquefied natural gas \(LNG\), mining and critical minerals. Both bring decades of experience to strengthen execution, support growth and enhance client delivery.

Greg Fischer, Vice President, Construction, Infrastructure

Fischer will oversee construction for the firm's infrastructure markets, focusing on advancing execution, growth and client delivery across critical infrastructure sectors.

With more than 35 years of leadership experience, Fischer has led complex projects across water, wastewater, transportation and mining industries. Most recently, he managed a large portfolio of complex infrastructure projects and built a strong track record in alternative delivery, strategic partnerships and large-scale team leadership.

"Greg's depth of infrastructure experience will take us to the next level," says Brett Williams, president of Burns & McDonnell Construction. "His leadership will be instrumental as we accelerate our growth in infrastructure design-build operations and deliver high-value solutions for our clients."

Paul Westerberg, Vice President, Construction, Energy EPC Operations

Westerberg will focus on scaling project delivery and supporting clients on complex, large-scale energy and resource projects. With more than 25 years of global EPC experience, he brings a strong track record of leading high-performing teams and delivering projects successfully.

Most recently, Westerberg led global teams across renewables, power, oil and gas and infrastructure sectors. Known for his strategic mindset and data-driven approach, he excels at aligning teams and insights to improve performance.

“Paul’s global perspective and track record of excellence in EPC execution make him a standout addition to our team,” Williams says. “His ability to navigate complex projects and build high-performing, collaborative teams will be pivotal as we expand our LNG and mining construction capabilities.”
